On the left is Mayhew playing the cornet, then Percival Leigh the double bass, Gilbert ABeckett the violin, Doyle the clarionet, Thackeray the piccolo, and Tom Taylor earnestly pegging away at the piano. The conductor of this goodly company is, of course, Mark Lemon, the able Punch editor at that time, who is seen appealing to the fell Jerrold to moderate his bitter transports on the drum. Seven years later a different hand portrayed, in the same journal, all these and other contributors as boys at play. Leech himself is riding his hobbyhorse, and, armed with a portecrayon, is about to leap an easel set sideways to serve as a hurdle; Jerrold is playing skittles; Thackeray has the bat in a small game of cricket; Lemon is playing rackets. Thus, week after week and year after year, did the indefatigable artist contribute to Punch drawings both humorous and pathetic. Their number from first to last has been estimated at more than three thousand. When we take into consideration the variety of books which he illustrated besides, we can realise how unwearying was the brain that gave birth to so many creations, and with what unflagging industry the hand must have laboured that pictorially realised those creations. The year 1864, that of his decease, came and found him still in harness, still at work as vigorously as ever, if not in robust and rugged health, at least in seeming good spirits....
